GENERAL DESCRIPTION

The European Court of Human Rights Religious Litigation Dataset (HUREL) provides data on case law concerning religion in Europe. It contains information on religion-related cases decided by the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) between 1959 and 2019. The dataset comprises information on case characteristics, litigants’ attributes, the type of claims pursued, the articles invoked under the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), and judicial outcomes in terms of judgments and decisions. It is the first dataset offering a comprehensive overview of religion-related applications to the ECtHR. As detailed below, one of its distinctive characteristics is that it contains information on both judgments and admissibility decisions. This allows for an analysis not only of the Courts’ judgments pertaining to religion, but also of patterns of litigation pursued by religious and secular groups.

SAMPLE

The sample includes all publicly available religion-related applications brought to the ECtHR. It covers both judgments and admissibility decisions and therefore includes cases that have been dismissed as inadmissible by the Court before reaching the stage of a judgment. Cases were identified by searching HUDOC, the official online-archive of the ECtHR (<https://hudoc.echr.coe.int/>). The HUDOC online archive records decisions, reports, and judgments of the various judicial bodies involved in the work of the Court. From the adoption of the European Convention on Human Rights in 1953 until 1998, all applications were first brought before the Commission that would refer its reports either to the Committee of Ministers or to the Court, who would then render a final decision. Since 1959, when the ECtHR officially started operating, the Court has sat in Committees of three judges, Chambers of seven judges, or the Grand Chamber of 17 judges. Committees were only responsible for admissibility decisions until 2010, but have also issued judgments since 2010. The Chambers and the Grand Chamber have issued admissibility decisions as well as judgments. Since 2010, additional single-judge formations have been in charge of deciding on the admissibility of a large number of cases.¹ Table 1 details the coverage of HUDOC and, by implication, of HUREL.²

To identify relevant cases, a twofold search strategy was adopted. The HUDOC archive was searched, first, for cases including Articles 9 or 14 of the ECHR, or Article 2 of Protocol 1 of the said convention and, second, for cases containing the keywords “religion”/“religious” (“religieux”) or names of specific religious denominations, e.g. “Catholic”. Cases were included in the sample when meeting the following selection criteria:

- All Article 9 cases;
- All Article 14 cases referring to religion;
- All Article 2 of Protocol 1 cases referring to religion;
- All other cases with claims being religiously motivated or directed against a religious group.

The sample contains cases concerning both religious and non-religious beliefs (e.g. pacifist convictions, vegan beliefs). This includes cases involving Article 9 – even when the applicants have not specified the religious dimension of their claim (frequent in claims concerning the Kurdish conflict in Turkey for example). The sample also contains cases concerning other than Article 9 cases (for instance Article 10) when these relate to a religious conflict. The following cases have been excluded from the sample because they do not pertain to the question of religious practice within state parties to the ECHR: Cases which involve religious individuals, but do not concern their exercise of religion or the protection of their religious groups (e.g. right to life cases), criminal offenses by religious individuals (e.g. sexual abuse by priests), reparation claims for suffering during the Holocaust, asylum cases not involving Article 9.

The unit of analysis is the case as decided by the Court. When the Court summarized several individual applications into one case, the dataset follows the logic of the Court and considers the summarized cases as the unit of analysis (the number of summarized applications is recoded in variable v3). In seven instances, the summarized applications involve different articles and decisions per applicant (e.g. Eweida and Others v. the United Kingdom). In these instances, summarized cases have been split up into units containing identical attributes. Moreover, in three cases where only some of a set of summarized applications concerned a religious claim, only these have been coded.

The full sample contains 1527 cases.

CODING PROCEDURE AND DATA

In a first step, each case contained in the sample was comprehensively documented in EndNote to facilitate subsequent coding. In a second step, individually trained coders coded all cases based on the codebook documented below. Independently achieved coding results were validated by lead researchers who also tested the consistency of the final dataset.

The codebook is organized as a series of closed response questions. Each question is assigned a unique variable name (bold and capitalized). For the former, data are recorded as numeric codes, for the latter as textual codes. Missing data are given the code 99. Where response questions were not applicable, the code 77 was assigned.
